

The Wenhui-Xinmin United Press Group

Advertising Info | Subscribe | Your Account | Contact Us

ShanghaiDaily.com | World
上海日报

Metro | Business | Shanghai Facts

Hotels | Restaurants | Nightlife

NEWS
Metro
National
World
Business
Sport
Front Page
District
PDF Files
OPINION
Perspectives
Word On Street
Editor's Desk
FEATURES...
BLOG CHANNELS
China News Flash
Buzzwords
Podcasts
China Hotels
Supplement
CLASSIFIEDS
Careers
Real Estate
For Rent
+ Place an Ad
SHANGHAI GUIDE
Hotels
Restaurants
Nightlife
+ Add a Location
SERVICES
Your Account
Subscribe
Contact Us
Advertising Info

Filed in World

Newspaper Edition

Condom artists make statement for safer sex

2006-08-19

CONDOMS are very much in style as a fashion accessory at the International AIDS Conference in Toronto, showing up on strait-laced men, shy teenagers and African grandmothers.

"There's a need to de-stigmatize condoms around the world, especially in Africa," said Franck DeRose, executive director of The Condom Project, which aims to get people comfortable about condoms, especially those living in countries where the little piece of latex is considered taboo.

To do that, the project has a program that gets people making their own condom art pin. It all starts with a craft table, packaged condoms, scraps of colored paper, candy and other double-sided tape.

Toronto resident Maria Parish, 58, was making hers with a blue condom and blue and yellow paper. "I want something to symbolize the flag of Ukraine," she said. "I am of Ukrainian descent and AIDS is a global problem."

DeRose said that creating wearable art out of condoms attracts people who normally wouldn't wear the prophylactics, let alone touch them or even utter the word.

Almost 400,000 condoms have been decorated and turned into brooches or pins around the world including India, Thailand, Senegal and Burkina Faso, he said.

Just this week alone, about 30,000 of the pins have been decorated at the conference, DeRose said.

"I don't think it's healthy or appropriate to change a culture. But we can change the risky behavior within a community."

Condom fashion

DeRose, an artist from Washington, D.C., came up with the idea three years ago while talking about ways to get more people to wear condoms to fight the HIV epidemic. The program has since spread around the world.

Adriana Bertini of Sao Paulo, Brazil, also was making a condom fashion statement. She had plastic mannequins sporting a dress made of orange condoms, a rose-colored mini, a blue harem outfit made of blue condoms, complete with a tight bodice and full-legged trousers. "The idea is you will see it and think of AIDS," said Bertini, who has been making her condom fashions for 10 years.

Agencies

双语播客·科普之旅
Science Podcasting
ShanghaiDaily.com

Subscribe to Online or
Print Edition

Subscriber Login

Username:

Password:

[Forget password?]

Search

Archive  Today

[advanced search]